The Ping Trilogy, written by American author Meg Wolitzer, explores the hidden world of numbers and the profound impact they can have on our lives. The trilogy consists of three novels: The Interestings, The Female Persuasion, and The Marriage Plot. Each novel follows the lives of a different group of characters as they navigate the complexities of love, loss, and identity. But woven throughout all three novels is a common thread: the power of numbers.

The Interestings

The Interestings is the first novel in the Ping Trilogy. It follows the lives of six friends from their teenage years through adulthood. As they grow up, the friends drift apart and their lives take different paths. But they are all haunted by the promise of their youth, and by the feeling that they could have been something more.

One of the most striking things about The Interestings is the way that Wolitzer uses numbers to explore the characters' lives. For example, the friends are all born in 1964, the year that the Beatles released their album A Hard Day's Night. This album becomes a touchstone for the characters, and it is mentioned throughout the novel. In fact, the novel's title is a reference to the album's opening track, "A Hard Day's Night."

Numbers also play a role in the characters' relationships. For example, the friends are all drawn to each other because they share a common birthday. This shared birthday creates a bond between them, and it is a reminder of the special connection that they have.

The Female Persuasion

The Female Persuasion is the second novel in the Ping Trilogy. It follows the life of Greer Kadetsky, a young woman who is trying to find her place in the world. Greer is a passionate feminist, and she is determined to make a difference in the world. But she soon learns that the world is not always ready for her.

Numbers play a significant role in The Female Persuasion. For example, Greer is obsessed with the number 13. She believes that 13 is a lucky number, and she sees it as a sign that she is destined for great things.

However, as Greer grows older, she begins to realize that 13 is not always a lucky number. In fact, it can sometimes be a sign of bad luck.

Numbers also play a role in Greer's relationships. For example, Greer's best friend is named Zee Eisenstat. Zee is a brilliant scientist, and she is obsessed with the number pi. Pi is an irrational number, and it goes on forever. Zee's obsession with pi is a reflection of her own feelings of being lost and alone in the world.

The Marriage Plot

The Marriage Plot is the third novel in the Ping Trilogy. It follows the life of Jake Jacobson, a young man who is trying to figure out what he wants to do with his life. Jake is a talented writer, but he is afraid to pursue his dreams. He is also struggling to come to terms with his sexuality.

Numbers play a role in The Marriage Plot. For example, Jake is obsessed with the number 7. He believes that 7 is a magical number, and he sees it as a sign of hope and possibility. However, as Jake grows older, he begins to realize that 7 is not always a magical number. In fact, it can sometimes be a sign of bad luck.

Numbers also play a role in Jake's relationships. For example, Jake falls in love with a woman named Plum. Plum is a beautiful and intelligent woman, but she is also very independent. Jake is afraid that Plum will never love him, and he is constantly trying to win her over.
