Sundin begins her story by painting a vivid picture of her happy life with her husband, Keith. They were a young couple with a bright future ahead of them. However, their world was shattered when Keith was killed in a tragic accident.

In the aftermath of her husband's death, Sundin found herself lost in a sea of grief. She struggled to make sense of her loss and wondered if she would ever find happiness again. It was during this dark time that she began to see the white sails.

At first, the white sails were a symbol of her pain. They represented the loss of her husband and the emptiness that she felt inside. However, as time went on, the white sails began to take on a new meaning.

Sundin began to see the white sails as a symbol of hope. They represented the possibility of healing and the belief that she could find happiness again. The white sails became a beacon of light in her darkness.

Through her journey of grief, Sundin learned the importance of faith. She found comfort in her belief in God and in the knowledge that her husband was in a better place. Her faith gave her the strength to keep going, even when she felt like giving up.

In addition to faith, Sundin also found healing through the power of love. She was surrounded by a supportive family and friends who helped her through her darkest days. Their love gave her the strength to face her grief and to begin to rebuild her life.
