The Battle

The Battle of Hastings was fought on October 14, 1066, near the town of Hastings in Sussex, England. The Norman army, led by William the Conqueror, defeated the English army, led by Harold Godwinson. The battle lasted for several hours and was fought with great ferocity. William's victory was due in part to his superior tactics and the use of cavalry.

The Aftermath

The Norman victory at Hastings had a profound impact on English history. The Normans established a new ruling class and introduced a new language and culture. The English language was heavily influenced by French, and the English legal system was based on Norman law. The Norman Conquest also led to the establishment of a new social order, with the Normans at the top and the English at the bottom.

The Legacy

The Battle of Hastings is still remembered today as one of the most important events in English history. The battle is commemorated by a number of monuments, including the Battle of Hastings Centre and the Bayeux Tapestry. The battle is also the subject of numerous books, films, and television programs.
