Sally the Seagull loved to fly high in the sky. She would often spend her days soaring over the ocean, looking for new and exciting things to see. One day, Sally was flying over a beach when she saw a group of children playing in the sand. Sally had never seen children before, and she was curious about them.

Sally swooped down to the beach and landed near the children. The children were surprised to see a seagull so close to them, but they were also very friendly. Sally introduced herself to the children, and they told her their names. Sally had a lot of fun playing with the children, and she soon realized that she liked them very much.

Sally continued to visit the beach every day to play with the children. The children would often tell Sally stories about their lives, and Sally would tell the children stories about her adventures. Sally and the children became very good friends, and they always had a lot of fun together.

One day, Sally was flying over the ocean when she saw a storm brewing in the distance. Sally knew that she had to warn the children about the storm, so she flew back to the beach as quickly as she could. When Sally arrived at the beach, she told the children about the storm, and she warned them to go home. The children thanked Sally for warning them, and they quickly ran home to safety.

The storm soon hit the beach, and the waves were very rough. Sally was glad that she had warned the children about the storm, and she was happy that they were safe.

Sally continued to visit the beach every day, and she always had a lot of fun playing with the children. Sally and the children were very good friends, and they always had a lot of fun together.
